

They're Organized and on the Move

You're right, the White House has opened a Pandora's box that will be difficult to close, that is breathtakingly undemocratic, and that the country, if not liberal politicians, will come to regret ("An Inconvenient Democracy," Review & Outlook, Dec. 8).

As Saul Alinsky said in "Rules for Radicals," "Remember: Once you organize people around something as commonly agreed upon as pollution, then an organized people is on the move." Barack Obama was a 23-year-old Columbia University graduate when he first began organizing for Alinsky's disciples. Now he's organizing through the faux science of global warming for the power to redistribute wealth. It was Alinsky who said that "it is necessary to begin where the world is if we are going to change it to what we think it should be. That means working in the system."

The system accepts the "green" movement with little thought for costs. "Climate-gate" and negative sentiment surrounding cap and trade, thankfully stalled in the Senate, haven't stopped President Obama. He's maneuvered right around both using the Environmental Protection Agency.

Meanwhile, William McGurn (Main Street: "My Big Fat Government Take-over," Dec. 8) points out a recent Gallup Poll in which 57% of Americans believe government is doing things that should be left to business and individuals. Here's a solution, Mr. President: How about listening to them for a change?

E.J. SMITH
Newport, R.I.

Letters intended for publication should be addressed to: The Editor, 1211 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10036, or emailed to wsj.ltrs@wsj.com. Please include your city and state. All letters are subject to editing, and unpublished letters can be neither acknowledged nor returned.

JOIN THE DEBATE

Q: How would you grade the Obama administration's handling of cybersecurity?

—Cast your vote at
WSJ.com/Question